

By unionizing, doctors earn the right to bargain over their wages, benefits, and working conditions.

Public sector doctors are under tremendous pressure to cut costs. Cost cutting measures are often driven by administrators with little or no medical training, who push for changes that doctors know will compromise patient care and put their own licenses in jeopardy.

Being part of a union can increase doctors' influence in large systems like UC. Union doctors have the right to negotiate over workplace conditions, including those which impact patient care. To join your colleagues in building a union, return your signed authorization card today.
